Market Commentary

Central bank activity continued to dominate markets in what was a strong month for the majority of asset classes. Broadly, equities moved higher in June, led by Japanese stocks which returned 5.3% in yen terms. In the US, the S&P 500 index reached record highs after gaining 2.0% over the month, and emerging markets (EM) equity continued its recovery, returning 2.7% over the month (in US dollar terms). Furthermore, EM debt ended the month up by 0.8% in USD terms, as investor interest in the asset class continued to increase following last year's sharp selloff.

In the face of sluggish growth, the European Central Bank (ECB) loosened policy materially in June. The Bank cut its benchmark interest rate by 0.10%, and took its deposit rate for excess bank returns into negative territory for the first time in its history, to encourage "active" use of this capital. The ECB has also effectively extended its "Long Term Refinancing Operation" (LTRO), and re-named it a "Targeted Long Term Refinancing Operation" (TLTRO). This policy enables banks to borrow money on favourable terms if they pass in on to targeted businesses, namely the credit-starved SMEs of the euro area. In response to concerns over deflation in Europe, and given the continued strength of the euro, ECB President Mario Draghi indicated that further monetary stimulus might be necessary, specifically referring to the appropriateness of "a broad based asset purchase programme" (quantitative easing) for the first time.

In contrast, the US Federal Reserve (Fed) is continuing to taper its asset purchasing programme, now down to USD 35 billion per month and widely expected to go to zero by the end of the year. Janet Yellen, Chair of the Board of Governors at the Fed, remains dovish, although it is noteworthy that she raised concerns about the level of credit spreads, stating that “high yield bonds have caught our attention” (see Figure 1). US GDP growth for Q1 was revised down to -2.9% at an annualised rate, in large part due to the severe winter weather conditions which effectively closed down large chunks of the economy. Since then, data has been pointing to a strong recovery for Q2 and beyond.

In the UK, the Bank of England (BoE) is likely to be the first major central bank to raise interest rates. Governor of the Bank, Mark Carney, has indicated that the first rate hike could come sooner than the market expects, implying a possible hike before the end of the year. When the BoE does raise rates, it will be gradual, and rates are unlikely to return to their pre-crisis highs. Sterling strengthened by 2.1% against the US dollar over the month, and is now up 12.4% versus the greenback over a 12 month period.

The People's Bank of China took steps to ease policy as it lowered banks' reserve requirements. This is part of a series of measures taken in recent months to combat the slowdown in the economy. This is part of a series of steps taken in recent months to combat the slowdown in the economy. The declining growth rate in China seems to have bottomed out, with leading indicators at their highest levels since late last year. Chinese stocks returned 2.7% in June, in US dollar terms, but the problems in credit markets and potential bad debts in the banking system have kept the Chinese stock market subdued, down 4.0% in US dollar terms year-to-date.

Japanese equities recovered strongly in June following a weak start to the year, with valuations having reached particularly attractive levels. Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's "Third Arrow" reform plans had underwhelmed investors, but there appears to be greater commitment to taking strong action, with an announced cut in corporation tax and other business friendly proposals. In part, the rise in equities also shows a diminished concern around the April increase in sales tax.

Away from central banks, the other dominant feature of the month was geopolitics, especially the rapid advance of the militant Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIS) in Iraq. This initially caused a surge in the oil price, but as it became clear that resistance was building against ISIS troops as they advanced closer to Shia dominated areas, the price fell back. At the time of writing, ISIS remains somewhat short of Iraq's southern oil fields, which produce the majority of Iraqi oil. Brent crude ended the month up by 2.7%, still comfortably within its trading range over the past two years. To date, Iraq's oil exports have not been impacted by the ISIS advance, but the situation is clearly unpredictable, and the price of gold reacted with a 5.8% rise over the month.

At this stage of the cycle we remain confident that further upward progress in equity markets can be expected, although not at the same pace as over the past two years when markets were consistently re-valued. We expect yields to rise as the economic recovery in the developed world continues apace and inflation, currently very subdued, begins to build. The extremely low volatility in markets (as implied by the Vix) also suggests a degree of complacency building, and it is important to remember that we are living in unusual times. Interest rates in most developed economies are at or very close to all-time lows, and extraordinary monetary policy is happening on a scale never before seen. Such conditions are likely to result in extraordinary and unpredictable consequences. In our view it is not a time to be reducing risk overall in portfolios but a time to take stock; reduce exposure to those asset classes where valuations have become very stretched and make sure that equity exposure is broadly diversified with a key focus on valuation and quality.
